Summary

Congress, through the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA), provides a variety of benefits and services to veterans and to certain members of their families. These benefits include disability compensation and pensions, education benefits, survivor benefits, medical treatment, life insurance, vocational rehabilitation, and burial and memorial benefits. In order to receive these benefits, a veteran (or an eligible family member) must apply for them by submitting the necessary information to a local VA office. The local VA office will make an initial determination on the application for benefits. Any veteran who is not satisfied with the local VA's determination is permitted to appeal the decision. This report provides a step-by-step breakdown of the appeal process for veterans' claims.

After an appeal is filed, the local VA office will again review the claim. If the local VA office still denies the claim, the local VA office will prepare the claim file for the appeal and provide the claimant with a blank VA Form 9—a form that must be completed to make an appeal to the Board of Veterans' Appeals (BVA). Claimants must follow specific procedures to request the appeal and must meet certain deadlines for submitting the proper information

The claimant may choose to have a hearing with the BVA during the appeal process. There are three different types of hearings that the claimant may choose: (1) an in-person hearing with a BVA member, held in Washington, DC; (2) an in-person hearing with a BVA member, held at a local VA office; or (3) a teleconference hearing. The hearings with the BVA are informal and nonadversarial in nature. The claimant will be given the opportunity to explain the reasons for the appeal and to submit additional evidence during the hearing. The claimant may be represented during the appeal process.

After the BVA reaches a decision on the appeal, there are further options the claimant may pursue if he or she is still not satisfied with the BVA decision. A claimant may file a notice of appeal with the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC). The CAVC, an Article I court, has exclusive jurisdiction to review decisions of the BVA. A claimant must submit a notice of appeal within 120 days of receiving the decision from the BVA. However, a recent Supreme Court decision, Henderson v. Shinseki, clarified that the 120-day deadline is not a "jurisdictional" deadline. Therefore, an appeal to the CAVC will not necessarily be dismissed for missing the deadline. However, the claimant must have a good reason for filing late, such as an inability to meet the deadline due to mental incapacity. This report will examine this case and discuss various acceptable reasons for missing the 120-day deadline.

In the 112th Congress, various pieces of legislation have been proposed that would alter the appeal process. These proposals range from extending the 120-day filing deadline with the CAVC to permitting the BVA to review newly submitted evidence without having to remand the case to a local VA office for an initial review. The proposed legislation in the 112th Congress is discussed in Appendix A to this report.

Introduction

The Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) provides an array of benefits to veterans and to certain members of their families. These benefits include disability compensation and pensions, education benefits, survivor benefits, medical treatment, life insurance, vocational rehabilitation, and burial and memorial benefits.¹ In order to apply for these benefits, in most circumstances, the claimant will send an application to his or her local VA office. The local VA Regional Office (RO) will review the application and make an initial determination as to whether the claimant is entitled to the benefit. If the local VA office determines that the claimant is not entitled to the benefit sought, the claimant has the right to appeal that decision. This report provides an overview of the VA appeal process from the first stages of the appeal through review by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The introduction to this report will discuss the types of decisions that can be appealed, introduce the various actors in the appeal process, briefly describe the two avenues for appeal within the VA, and address the rights of a claimant to be represented during the appeal process. The report will then provide a step-by-step breakdown of the appeal process within the Department of Veterans Affairs followed by a description of further judicial review from the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, and the Supreme Court of the United States. Finally, the report concludes with a synopsis of legislative proposals to amend the appeal process.

Filing the Original Claim for Benefits at the VA

In order to apply for VA benefits, an applicant must file a claim at the local VA office, VA medical facility, or online at the VA's Veterans On-line Application (VONAPP) website.² Veterans Service Organizations (VSO) are available to provide assistance with applying for benefits.³

Once the VA has received a completed application for benefits, the VA will review the claim and determine whether to allow or deny the claim. The VA will mail the determination to the claimant. If the VA has denied the claim, the claimant may appeal the decision.

What Can Be Appealed?

After the VA Regional Office mails the claimant an initial determination, the claimant may initiate the appeal process. The claimant will be notified of the right to appeal when the initial determination is issued.⁴ The claimant is permitted to appeal any decision reached on a claim for benefits.⁵ The BVA's regulations, at 38 C.F.R. §20.101(a), provide a long, but not exhaustive, list of the types of decisions that can be appealed to the BVA, including decisions related to service-connected disability benefits, benefits for survivors, education assistance benefits, and burial benefits. A claimant can appeal a partial or complete denial of a claim.

Furthermore, if a claimant successfully receives a benefit from the RO, the claimant may still appeal the amount awarded. Thus, if an RO determines that a veteran is entitled to a 30% disability rating, but the claimant believes that percentage should be higher, this decision can also be appealed.⁶

A claimant is not permitted to appeal certain medical determinations made by medical examiners. For example, a veteran is not permitted to appeal a physician's decision to prescribe or not to prescribe certain drugs or specific treatments.⁷ The Board does not have jurisdiction over these types of claims.

Two Types of Appeals

When making an appeal on an initial determination, the claimant may choose to proceed with the traditional method of review or may choose to have a Decision Review Officer (DRO) review the case. Both forms of review are discussed in detail in this report. Briefly stated, under the traditional review process, the local VA office will review the claim folder to ensure that there are no obvious errors in the claim, prepare the case for review, and send the case to the Board of Veterans' Appeals (BVA). The BVA will then provide a de novo review of the case and reach a determination.

Under DRO review, a Decision Review Officer, at the local VA office, will review the claim folder de novo. After reviewing the claim, the DRO will make another determination. Seeking DRO review does not preclude the claimant from pursuing the traditional review process. If the claimant is not satisfied with the DRO's decision, the claimant may proceed with the traditional review process and have the appeal heard by the BVA.

Details of both the traditional method of appeal and the DRO review are provided later in this report.

Who Handles Veterans' Appeals?

During the appeal process for veterans claims, various different officials will handle the claim. This section provides a brief introduction to the decision makers who will potentially review an appeal. More details on the appeal process and how these decision makers reach their conclusions follow.

Decision Review Officer

Each VA Regional Office has at least one Decision Review Officer on staff. The DRO is a “senior technical expert who is responsible” for processing appeals made to their RO.⁸ A DRO may hear any appeal that may be heard by the Board of Veterans’ Appeals. During DRO review, a DRO will review the claim de novo—that is, they will look at the case anew and afford no deference to the initial determination made by the Regional Office.⁹ The DRO may not revise the initial decision “in a manner that is less advantageous to the claimant” unless the DRO finds an instance of “clear and unmistakable error.”¹⁰ In order to have an appeal reviewed by a DRO, the claimant must ask to take DRO review. Otherwise, the traditional form of review, directly through the Board of Veterans’ Appeals, will proceed.¹¹ If a claimant opts for DRO review, the claimant may still have the BVA review the claim if the DRO’s decision is not favorable to the claimant.¹² The Government Accountability Office (GAO) reported that, in 2010, 65% of claimants opted to have a DRO review their appeal.¹³

The Board of Veterans’ Appeals

When a claimant’s application for benefits has been denied, an appeal can be made to the Board of Veterans’ Appeals (BVA or Board).¹⁴ The BVA is part of the Department of Veterans Affairs, located in Washington, DC, and makes the final determination on an appeal within the VA. The Board consists of experienced attorneys in the field of veterans law. Board members are appointed by the Secretary of the VA, with the approval of the President.¹⁵ As of 2011, the Board consisted of 64 members.¹⁶ These Board members make the ultimate conclusion on appeals within the VA. The BVA also employs staff attorneys that assist the Board members while preparing a decision for a claim, much like a clerk for a judge.¹⁷ The BVA has a significant work load—in the 2011 fiscal year (FY), the BVA received and docketed 47,763 appeals.¹⁸ The BVA expects that number to climb to 66,600 for FY 2012.¹⁹

The Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims

If a claimant is not satisfied with the decision from the BVA, the claimant has the option of appealing to the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC).²⁰ The CAVC is an Article I court, established by Congress, which has exclusive jurisdiction over appeals from the BVA.²¹ Currently, up to nine judges may sit on the CAVC and review appeals from the BVA.²² The CAVC is a separate entity from the VA, but reviews BVA decisions. The VA's General Counsel will defend the BVA decision before the court.²³ The CAVC is also a busy tribunal, in FY 2011 the CAVC received 3,948 appeals.²⁴ Chief Judge Kasold has noted that the CAVC "has become one of the busiest federal appellate courts based on the numbers of appeals filed and decided per judge."²⁵

The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit

If the claimant is dissatisfied with the determination reached by the CAVC, the claimant may appeal the decision to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit (Federal Circuit).²⁶ The scope of review on veterans' appeals provided by the Federal Circuit is limited by statute. The Federal Circuit can set aside regulations that are arbitrary or capricious, unconstitutional, in excess of statutory jurisdiction, or procedurally deficient.²⁷ Generally, the Federal Circuit is not permitted to review any challenge to a factual determination, or a "challenge to a law or regulation as applied to the facts of a particular case."²⁸ The Federal Circuit provides the last appeal of right for claimants appealing decisions made by the BVA.

The Supreme Court of the United States

Finally, if the claimant is still not satisfied by the decision reached by the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, the claimant may petition the Supreme Court for certiorari.²⁹ The Supreme Court may or may not decide to hear the case—the claimant is not guaranteed to have the Supreme Court hear the appeal. If the Supreme Court grants certiorari (hears the case) any decision provided by the Supreme Court is final.

Legal Representation

The VA has established that a claimant “will be accorded full right to representation in all stages of an appeal by a recognized organization, attorney, agent, or other authorized person.”³⁰ The VA sets out certain requirements that a representative must meet in order to assist a claimant during the appeal process.³¹ The VA strongly encourages claimants to seek representation and a vast majority of claimants are represented.³² Claimants, however, are not required to have representation in the appeal process and may represent themselves.

Veterans' Service Organizations (VSOs) may provide trained representatives to the claimant free of charge.³³ The vast majority of claimants are represented by VSO representatives—in 2000, the BVA noted that approximately 85% of claimants were represented by a VSO.³⁴

Other veterans elect to hire an attorney or a recognized “agent” to represent them during the appeal. Attorneys and recognized agents, however, may charge for their services rendered.³⁵ Regulations provide that fees “may be based on a fixed fee, hourly rate, a percentage of benefits recovered, or a combination of such bases.”³⁶ Fees must be reasonable and fee agreements must be filed with the VA Office of the General Counsel.³⁷

Veterans must fill out VA Form 21-22 if they wish to be represented by a VSO or fill out VA Form 21-22a if they wish to have an attorney or authorized agent provide representation.³⁸

VA's Duty to Assist Claimants

The VA has various legal obligations to assist the claimant and to ensure that a proper claim for benefits is filed. These obligations include assisting the claimant to obtain evidence,³⁹ ensuring the claimant has the necessary forms and instructions,⁴⁰ and notifying the claimant if additional information is needed.⁴¹

Federal regulations further require the VA to render a “decision which grants every benefit that can be supported in law while protecting the interests of the Government.”⁴² Therefore, the VA is obligated to consider every legal theory that could support a claim for benefits. Finally, the VA is obligated to weigh evidence in favor of the claimant when reaching its determination. Under 38 U.S.C. §5107(b), “[w]hen there is an approximate balance of positive and negative evidence regarding any issue material to the determination of a matter, the Secretary shall give the benefit of the doubt to the claimant.” Therefore, in order to deny a claim for benefits, the preponderance of the evidence must show that the claimant should not be entitled to the benefits sought.

Whenever the VA reaches a determination, both on the initial application and on appeal, the VA must provide notice of the decision and “an explanation of the procedure for obtaining review of the decision.”⁴³

The VA Appeal Process

Notice of Disagreement

After a claimant has received an initial determination from the local RO, a dissatisfied claimant may initiate the appeal process. In order to begin the appeal, the claimant must first submit a Notice of Disagreement (NOD).⁴⁴ The NOD is the first step in letting the VA know that a claimant wishes to appeal a decision. There is no specific form that needs to be filled out for the NOD.⁴⁵ The claimant must simply submit, in writing, a statement declaring that the claimant disagrees with the RO’s initial determination and that the claimant wants to appeal that initial decision.⁴⁶ The claimant should be specific about whether the entire decision is being appealed or only part of the decision is being appealed.⁴⁷ Also, at this stage of the appeal process, a claimant may make a request to undergo DRO review, instead of taking the traditional review straight to the BVA.⁴⁸

Where and When to Send the NOD

In most circumstances, the NOD must be sent to the local office that made the initial determination.⁴⁹ However, if the claimant has moved, the NOD should be mailed to the local VA office that is currently handling the claimant’s file.⁵⁰ The NOD must be submitted within one year from when the local VA office mails the initial determination.⁵¹ After one year has passed, the decision is deemed to be final, except in rare circumstances.⁵²

DRO Review and Statement of the Case

After the local VA office receives the claimant's NOD, the office will begin setting up the claim for appeal. The next step in the process depends on whether the claimant decides to pursue the traditional appeal process or to ask for DRO review of the claim.

If the claimant decides to pursue the traditional review process, either a Rating Veterans Service Representative (RVS) or a DRO⁵³ will reexamine the claim file and review any new evidence the veteran has provided.⁵⁴ Under the traditional form of review, the reviewing RVS or DRO may only overturn the original decision based on new evidence or for a clear and unmistakable error made in the original decision.⁵⁵

If the claimant requests DRO review, the DRO will begin to look over the claim again from scratch. Under DRO review, the DRO will review the claim de novo—that is, they will provide no deference to the initial decision reached by the VA.⁵⁶ In this form of review, there does not need to be any new evidence nor any clear and unmistakable error for the DRO to overturn the initial decision. The DRO may not revise the initial decision “in a manner that is less advantageous to the claimant” unless the DRO finds an instance of “clear and unmistakable error.”⁵⁷ The DRO may hold informal conferences as well as formal hearings with the claimant regarding the claim.⁵⁸ After reviewing the claim, the DRO will send a new decision to the claimant along with “a summary of the evidence, a citation to pertinent laws, a discussion of how those laws affect the decision, and a summary of the reasons for the decision.”⁵⁹

Regardless of whether the claimant elects DRO review or the traditional review, the reviewer will make a decision to allow or deny the claim. If the reviewer allows the claim, then the claimant has won his appeal and the appeal process ends. If the reviewer decides not to grant the claimant's request for benefits, then they will send a notice to the claimant and the claimant may continue with the appeal process. When the VA provides the claimant with notice stating that the claim will be denied, they will also provide the claimant with a Statement of the Case (SOC).⁶⁰ The SOC is a document that summarizes the evidence, laws, and regulations that were used to make a determination in the claim and explains why the VA reached the decision.⁶¹ The local VA office will also send a blank VA Form 9, which must be filled out and returned to continue the appeal process.⁶²

The Substantive Appeal: VA Form 9

The VA will send the claimant a blank VA Form 9 along with the Statement of the Case. The VA Form 9 must be filled out to continue the appeal process.⁶³ The claimant has sixty days from when the Statement of the Case was mailed or one year from when the initial determination was mailed, whichever is longer, to submit the VA Form 9 to the local VA office.⁶⁴ The claimant may seek a deadline extension for submitting the VA Form 9, but must show good cause by providing an explanation for why the additional time is needed.⁶⁵

When filling out the form, the claimant will have the opportunity to state whether he/she wishes to have a hearing with the BVA, to point out any mistakes that were made on the SOC, and to establish why the claimant believes the VA made an incorrect decision when determining the claim.⁶⁶ The form provides detailed instructions for properly completing the substantive appeal. The claimant may add new evidence when the VA Form 9 is submitted to the VA office.⁶⁷ If the VA office receives any new evidence from the claimant, the VA office will prepare a Supplemental Statement of the Case (SSOC) and mail it to the claimant.⁶⁸ The claimant will then have thirty days to notify the VA office of any mistakes found in the SSOC.⁶⁹

Once the VA Form 9 has been completed and submitted, the claimant has fulfilled his obligations for filing the appeal.⁷⁰ The local VA office will certify the case to the BVA after it receives the completed VA Form 9.⁷¹

BVA Docket and Docket Number

Once the case has been certified to the BVA, the BVA will then give the claim a docket number. The claim will be heard in the order in which it was received, as the BVA is obligated by law to hear claims on a first come, first served bases.⁷² A claimant may file “a motion to advance on the docket” in order to have their case heard more quickly.⁷³ However, these motions are only granted under rare circumstances—the claimant will have to provide the BVA, in writing, a strong reason for moving the claim up on the docket, such as an imminent foreclosure, bankruptcy, or terminal illness.⁷⁴ The claimant should also provide any evidence of such a situation to the BVA at the time the motion is filed.

Hearings with the BVA

When the claimant submits VA Form 9, the claimant will indicate whether he wishes to have a hearing with a Board member from the BVA. There are three kinds of hearings: 1) an in-person hearing at the local RO; 2) an in-person hearing in Washington, DC; or 3) a teleconference hearing.⁷⁵ The teleconference hearing takes place at a local VA office, while the Board member is in Washington, DC. The BVA notes that teleconference hearings are typically the fastest to arrange, as they do not require any travel.⁷⁶ The BVA has also noted that it is working to make teleconference hearings more widely available and to upgrade their teleconference technology.⁷⁷

Unlike court proceedings, hearings are informal and nonadversarial. The Board member generally will explain how the hearing will take place, ask the claimant to take an oath, and provide the claimant with the opportunity to present any information or evidence that the claimant believes is relevant and material.⁷⁸ The presiding Board member “may set reasonable time limits” for the argument and may exclude evidence that is “not relevant or material to the issue.”⁷⁹ The claimant can be represented at a BVA hearing.⁸⁰ The hearing may be documented in a transcript, which is also added to the file for review by the Board.⁸¹

Adding Additional Evidence to the Claim File and the Ninety-Day Rule

A veteran is permitted to submit additional evidence prior to the BVA reviewing the claim file. The claimant may even submit additional evidence at the hearing, if the claimant has elected to have a hearing with a Board member.⁸² Therefore, the claimant should submit any new medical evidence from recent treatments, additional statements, and anything else the claimant believes is material to the claim as soon as the claimant receives it.

If the claimant's file is still located at the local VA office, any additional evidence should be submitted to that office. At this point, as stated earlier, the local VA office will provide the claimant with a Supplemental Statement of the Case.⁸³ As the claim gets close to being considered by the BVA, the local VA office will forward the claim file to the BVA. The local office will send the claimant a notice, informing them that the claim file has been transferred to the BVA.⁸⁴ Furthermore, the BVA will send the claimant a notice when it receives the file.

If the file has already been forwarded to the Board, the claimant should send additional evidence directly to the BVA. Upon receiving the new evidence, the BVA will remand the case to the local VA office to perform an initial review of the evidence.⁸⁵ However, the claimant may waive his right to have the local office review the evidence and simply have the BVA evaluate the evidence.⁸⁶ Providing this waiver may save time by avoiding a remand to the local VA office.⁸⁷ Proposed legislation would provide for an automatic waiver of the local office review and allow the BVA to examine the evidence in the first instance.⁸⁸

There is a time limit for submitting evidence once the Board has received the file. The claimant must submit any additional evidence, or a request for a hearing (if the claimant had not already requested one), within ninety days after the BVA has received the claim file, or up until the BVA actually decides the case (whichever comes first).⁸⁹ If the claimant wishes to submit information or evidence after the ninety days have passed, he or she must submit a motion to the BVA asking for the evidence to be accepted and must show good cause for missing the deadline.⁹⁰ However, the claimant may present additional evidence during the hearing, even if the hearing is held following the expiration of the ninety-day period.⁹¹

BVA Review of Claim

After the hearing, a Board member and a staff attorney will be assigned to review the claim file. The Board member will ensure the file is complete and evaluate all the evidence, forms, written arguments, and hearing transcripts.⁹² The staff attorney will function similarly to a clerk for a judge and perform any additional research that is necessary.⁹³ The staff attorney may also make recommendations for the Board member to review. At this point, the Board member will make a decision on the appeal.

Amount of Time for BVA to Reach a Decision

It is uncertain how long it may take the BVA to reach a decision on an appeal. According to the 2011 BVA's Report of the Chairman, the "average length of time between filing the appeal and the Board's disposition was 883 days."⁹⁴ The Board has noted that a focus for fiscal years 2012 and 2013 will be to reduce the backlog of cases by increasing efficiency.⁹⁵

BVA Decisions

The BVA will notify the claimant of its decision by mailing a notice to the claimant's address as listed in the claim file. The notice will state the decision and explain the legal basis for reaching that conclusion.⁹⁶ The BVA will reach one of three decisions.

First, the Board may approve the claim and grant the claimant the benefit sought. If the BVA approves the claim, the claimant wins and the appeal is over.

Second, the Board may remand the claim. If the Board remands the claim, the Board member has determined that additional information is needed in order to make the proper decision on the appeal.⁹⁷ This is sometimes referred to as "additional development."⁹⁸ Upon remand, the claim folder will be returned to the local VA office to perform the additional work needed on the claim.⁹⁹ The local VA office, after obtaining the necessary information, will then make another decision on the claim.¹⁰⁰ If the local VA office still believes that the claim cannot be approved, the local VA office will send the claim folder back to the BVA.¹⁰¹ The claim will maintain its initial place on the BVA docket, so it will be heard by the Board more quickly upon its return.¹⁰² The BVA will then review the claim file again and reach a decision.

Third, the BVA may deny the claim. If the BVA denies the claim, the Board member has determined that the claimant is not entitled to the compensation or benefit sought. The BVA will provide a statement outlining the claimant's rights and explaining what further steps may be taken to review the decision.¹⁰³ The claimant may continue with the appeal, as discussed below, or accept the BVA's decision.

Reconsideration of BVA Decisions

If a claimant wishes to appeal the BVA's decision, the claimant may make an appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC), discussed below. However, there are also additional motions the claimant may file directly with the BVA in order to have the decision reconsidered.

Motion for Reconsideration

If the claimant is able to demonstrate that the BVA made an obvious error of fact or law in its decision, the claimant may file a "motion to reconsider" with the BVA.¹⁰⁴ A motion for reconsideration "may be filed at anytime."¹⁰⁵ This motion should be sent directly to the BVA and not to the local VA office.¹⁰⁶ If the motion is allowed by the BVA, the claimant may request an additional hearing before the Board.¹⁰⁷ In order to be successful, the claimant must show that the BVA made an obvious error of law or fact, and that the BVA's decision would have been different if the error had not occurred.¹⁰⁸ The Code of Federal Regulations sets forth the information that must be included with the motion in order for the motion to be considered.¹⁰⁹

Reopening the Case

The claimant may request to have the case reopened only if the claimant has obtained "new and material" evidence relating to the claim.¹¹⁰ Evidence will only be considered "new and material" if it relates to the original case and was not included in the claims folder at the time the BVA reviewed the case.¹¹¹ In order to reopen a case, the claimant should submit the new evidence to the local VA office, not to the BVA.¹¹²

CUE Motion

If the appellant believes that the BVA made a crucial error in reaching the decision, the appellant may file a motion with the BVA to revise the determination for "clear and unmistakable error" (CUE).¹¹³ In order to succeed, the BVA must determine that, but for the error, the BVA would have reached a different decision.¹¹⁴ A mere difference in opinion is not sufficient. Regulations promulgated by the VA provide a few examples of what does not constitute a clear and unmistakable error, including a changed medical diagnosis, a changed interpretation of a statute or regulation, or the failure to fulfill the VA's duty to assist the claimant.¹¹⁵ This list illustrates the difficulty of establishing a clear and unmistakable error. If a CUE motion is denied, the appellant cannot request another CUE review on the same issue.¹¹⁶

The claimant may file a CUE motion at any time by sending the motion directly to the BVA.¹¹⁷ However, if the appellant files a motion for CUE after filing an appeal to the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, or if the appellant files an appeal to the Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims prior to the BVA reaching a determination on the motion, the BVA will stay the CUE proceeding until the CAVC appeal has been concluded.¹¹⁸

Appealing a BVA Decision to the Courts

Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC)

The Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, an Article I court, has exclusive jurisdiction over appeals from the Board of Veterans Appeals.¹¹⁹ In order to have the CAVC hear an appeal from the BVA, the appellant must submit a notice of appeal to the court within 120 days from the date that the BVA mailed its decision.¹²⁰ Only the claimant may file an appeal to the CAVC, the VA does not have the right to have a decision of the BVA reviewed.¹²¹

The CAVC will reach its determination by reviewing the record from the BVA and the written arguments provided by the appellant and the VA.¹²² Although the CAVC is authorized to hear oral arguments, a vast majority of cases are decided without such argument.¹²³ The CAVC is not permitted to review de novo a determination of fact made by the BVA.¹²⁴ Depending on the nature and complexity of the case, either one judge, a panel of three judges, or the entire court will render a decision on the case.¹²⁵ Again, in a vast majority of cases, one judge will make a decision on the case.¹²⁶

If the CAVC rules in favor of the appellant, the case can be remanded to the BVA in order to implement the CAVC's ruling.¹²⁷ If the CAVC denies the appellant's claim, the appellant may seek further review at the United States Court of Appeals for Federal Claims.¹²⁸ The VA may also appeal a CAVC decision.¹²⁹

120-Day Filing Deadline: Henderson v. Shinseki

The 120-day deadline for filing an appeal to the CAVC has prompted considerable interest from courts and Congress. For years, the 120-day deadline was viewed as a procedural requirement, and thus subject to equitable tolling—that is, missing the deadline did not automatically preclude review by the CAVC.¹³⁰ However, after the Supreme Court decision in Bowles v. Russell,¹³¹ the CAVC and U.S. Court of Appeals for Federal Claims determined that the deadline was actually a jurisdictional requirement—that is, an appeal made after the deadline could not be heard by the CAVC for any reason.¹³² However, in 2011, the Supreme Court clarified that the CAVC deadline was not jurisdictional and, therefore, an appeal will not necessarily be precluded if the deadline is missed.¹³³

In 2001, David Henderson filed a claim with the VA for compensation based on his need for in-home care.¹³⁴ His claim was denied by the VA Regional Office and was subsequently denied by the BVA.¹³⁵ After the BVA denied his claim, Henderson appealed the decision to the CAVC.¹³⁶ However, his notice of appeal was filed fifteen days after the 120-day filing deadline had expired.¹³⁷ The CAVC, in a 2-1 decision, relied on the Supreme Court's recent Bowles v. Russell decision and dismissed his appeal for lack of jurisdiction due to the missed deadline.¹³⁸ The Court of Appeals for Federal Claims concurred with the CAVC, noting that the 120-day deadline was jurisdictional, and thus mandatory.¹³⁹

The Supreme Court granted certiorari and oral arguments were held late in 2010.¹⁴⁰ The Court reviewed whether “a veteran's failure to file a notice of appeal within the 120-day period should be regarded as having ‘jurisdictional’ consequences.”¹⁴¹ In March 2011, the Court unanimously determined that the deadline was not jurisdictional and that missing the deadline does not necessarily preclude the CAVC from hearing an appeal.¹⁴² The Court noted that Congress had taken great care to ensure that the system for awarding veterans benefits greatly favors veterans. Thus, the Court determined that Congress did not intend the 120-day deadline to be a jurisdictional rule.¹⁴³ However, the Court did state that the deadline is an “important procedural rule” and remanded the case to the Federal Circuit to determine whether the appellant’s “case falls within any exception to the rule.”¹⁴⁴ Therefore, although the Court established that the deadline was not mandatory, it provided no guidance for when a case could still be heard even after the deadline was missed.

The CAVC, in 2011, issued a ruling that provides context to when the court would still hear an appeal even after the deadline is missed.¹⁴⁵ The CAVC, prior to its decision in Henderson v. Shinseki, already had a test for determining when equitable tolling would be permissible. Therefore, it returned to its previous jurisprudence on the issue.¹⁴⁶ It stated:

The doctrine of equitable tolling has generally established parameters, and over time decisions of the Federal Circuit and this Court have addressed those parameters in the context of appeals to this Court. Thus, for example, equitable tolling was not applied when failure to file was due to general negligence or procrastination. Rather, it was applied only when circumstances precluded a timely filing despite the exercise of due diligence, such as (1) a mental illness rendering one incapable of handling one’s own affairs or other extraordinary circumstances beyond one’s control, (2) reliance on the incorrect statement of a VA official, or (3) a misfiling at the regional office or the Board.¹⁴⁷

The CAVC held that if an appellant accidentally files the notice of appeal at the wrong location—for example, at the BVA instead of with the CAVC—but the notice of appeal is otherwise timely, equitable tolling is appropriate.¹⁴⁸ It also held that, although mental illness can be a reason to find equitable tolling to be appropriate, the appellant must demonstrate that he is actually “incapable of functioning or making decisions due to mental illness, that his mental illness prevented him from filing his appeal or seeking the assistance of counsel, or that his mental disabilities were related directly to his untimely filing.”¹⁴⁹ Therefore, although the 120-day deadline is not “jurisdictional,” it still precludes review from the CAVC in many circumstances.

Congress has also proposed legislation that would alter the 120-day filing period.¹⁵⁰ during the appeal process. By statute, the review provided by the Federal Circuit is rather limited. The Federal Circuit is not permitted to review “(A) a challenge to a factual determination, or (B) a challenge to a law or regulation as applied to the facts of a particular case.”¹⁵² The Federal Circuit can only review actions to see if they are arbitrary or capricious, unconstitutional, in excess of statutory jurisdiction, or procedurally deficient.¹⁵³ The Federal Circuit may modify, reverse, or remand decisions by the CAVC, as appropriate.¹⁵⁴ If either party is dissatisfied with the ruling from the Federal Circuit, an appeal may be made to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court does not have to hear the case and may deny certiorari. If the Supreme Court decides to hear the case, any decision reached by the Court is final.

Appendix. Proposed Legislation in the 112th Congress

The 112th Congress is considering a number of bills, which, if enacted, would alter the appeal process. Several of these proposals were previously introduced during the 111th Congress.¹⁵⁵

Streamlining the Appeal Process

S. 914, the Veterans Programs Improvement Act of 2011,¹⁵⁶ and H.R. 1484, the Veterans Appeals Improvement Act of 2011,¹⁵⁷ address the submission of new evidence during the appeals process. Currently, when a veteran claimant submits new evidence in support of a substantive appeal that has been certified to the Board of Veterans' Appeals, the BVA remands the claim to the local VA office to review the evidence.¹⁵⁸ If enacted, S. 914 and H.R. 1484 would allow the evidence to be submitted directly to the BVA unless the claimant requests that the evidence first be reviewed by the local VA office. This automatic waiver could improve the timeliness of the appeal process, as the Board would be able to adjudicate claims without waiting for the local VA office to provide the initial review of any new evidence.¹⁵⁹

The House and Senate are also both considering bills with residency requirements for judges on the U.S. Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims (CAVC).¹⁶⁰ These bills would require CAVC judges to have an official duty station at the CAVC principle office in the metropolitan area of Washington, DC. Additionally, the judges would be required to reside within fifty miles of Washington, DC. This residency requirement would still permit the CAVC to sit any place within the United States.

S. 1060, the Senate's Honoring All Veterans Act of 2011,¹⁶¹ proposes to treat certain misfiled documents as a motion for reconsideration at the BVA. Under the proposed legislation, if a claimant, who has not yet filed a notice of appeal with the CAVC, submits a document that expresses disagreement with a BVA decision to the BVA or the local VA office, the document would be treated as a motion for reconsideration of the Board's decision.¹⁶² However, the document filed with the BVA or local VA office would not be treated as a motion for reconsideration if the Board or VA office determines that such a document expresses an intent to appeal the decision to CAVC and forwards that document to the CAVC.

In order to improve the efficiency of the CAVC appeal process with regard to conferences ordered by the CAVC, another Senate bill proposes to require the VA to explain its position to the CAVC and the appellant when the parties are not in agreement concerning a possible remand.¹⁶³ Under the proposed legislation, if an agreement to remand has not been reached after the CAVC has required parties to participate in a conference to aid the resolution of the case, this bill would require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to submit, within seven days, a written report to the CAVC and the appellant describing the basis upon which the Secretary remains opposed to the remand.

Extension of the 120-Day Limit to File an Appeal to the CAVC

H.R. 810, the Fair Access to Veterans Benefits Act of 2011, would extend the 120-day limit for the filing of an appeal to the CAVC after a final decision of the Board of Veterans' Appeals.¹⁶⁴ If H.R. 810 is enacted, the appellant would have to show good cause for missing the deadline, which is considered in the Act to be the inability to file within the 120-day period due to a service-connected disability. H.R. 810 mirrors H.R. 5064, the Fair Access to Veterans Benefits Act of 2010, that was introduced in the 111th Congress.¹⁶⁵
